Some people have trouble sleeping, especially if they are nervous or stressed about something. Sleep experts say that it's better not to try too hard to get to sleep, and certainly not to keep looking at the time. To have good sleeping habits, it's better to sleep at regular times, and to sleep in a dark and quiet environment. It's also good not to sleep too soon after eating, or after drinking too much water. The amount of sleep we need is different from person to person, though the average seems to be just under eight hours.

第四部分 朗读短文(满分5分)

你有 90 秒钟的时间熟悉屏幕上的短文,并做朗读准备。在听到"开始录音"的信号后,请在 90 秒钟内朗读短文一遍。

British newspapers are much smaller than they used to be and their readers are often in a hurry, so newspapermen write as few words as possible. They tell their readers at once what happened, where, when and how it happened and what the result was. Readers want the fact set out as fully and accurately as possible. Readers are also interested in the people who have seen the accident. So a newspaperman always likes to get some information from someone who was there, which can be given in the person's own words. Because he can use only a few words, the newspaperman must choose those words carefully. Instead of "he called out in a loud voice", he writes "he shouted"; instead of "the loose stones rolled noisily down the side of the mountain", he will write "they thundered down the mountainside". Because many of the readers are in a hurry.
